

Choosing Your Baby's Doctor

The following are some suggestions to help you choose a physician for your infant.

A physician who provides care to infants and children is either a pediatrician whose specialty is medical care of infants through adolescence or a family practitioner who provides care to people of all ages.

When choosing your infant's doctor, solicit recommendations from friends, relatives, coworkers, or personal physician.

Many physicians will schedule a visit with you at your request to discuss your questions or concerns prior to baby's due date. The following are some of the issues that you may want to address during that visit.

Find out how the office works.

- What are the office hours?
- How can I make an appointment?
- Can I call and receive advice over the phone?
- How do I access after hours medical help?
- Addressing billing concerns
- What is the schedule for well baby exams?
- How are illness visits managed?

The physician is also able to address special health issues that you had during your pregnancy that may affect the infant.

Be prepared to discuss specific family medical history, as this may be relevant to the infant's health.

Find out what contact you and the baby will have with the doctor while you and the baby are in the hospital.

Discuss specific infant care concerns that may include feeding options and circumcision.
